

Randy's Pausch's Last Lecture was profound. The thing he said that affected me the most was, "The brick wall are there for a reason." He said that the brick walls are there to let us push forward. They test us on how much we want things. He is turning the obstacles in our life into tests of resolve. If you really want something you should be able to break through those walls. They filter those who don't want to put in the effort. Obstacles will always come and you must make it through.

He also mentioned the "Head Fake" idea which is a form of indirect learning. The lecture itself is an example of it. The title say's it is about, "Really Achieving Your Childhood Dreams," but he explains how to lead your own life.
